Every family has secrets, and the women of the Spicer family are no different. Their biggest secret is that they keep the scales of justice balanced if the guilty escape punishment. Lilith Spicer Godby killed five men; her eldest daughter Mackinsey murdered one who was a stalker and a killer.

Cassandra Godby is Lilith's second daughter and she has few secrets. Her life changes, however, when a woman in the family needs help to escape from the abuse of a well-to-do, politically connected husband.

When Cass joins with others to get the woman and her daughters safely into Canada, her home in the mountains becomes the target of mercenaries who have orders to kill her and burn her house to the ground for her part in the getaway. Cass and her highly trained dogs rout the enemy, but she then must decide what to do about the abusive husband who set these forces in motion. If her mother Lilith were still alive, there would be no hesitation—the man would die. But the decision of life or death now rests on Cass's shoulders. Is she the one who will keep the scales of justice balanced?

Favorite characters from the first book about this family of women reappear: a shape shifter noted for her charms and spells, an elderly aunt with the gift of Sight, and a Scottish elder who knows the history of women through the ages as far back to the time when God was a woman.

Cass alone must decide if she will be a modern-day warrior woman for her family, or a law abiding citizen. Some might say this is a story about acts of injustice, others might understand that there are times when unlawful things result in justice. Readers must decide for themselves.
