Stories from another London features modern tales based on traditional London legends of the uncanny, paranormal and supernatural. Most of this selection was originally published in the 21st century penny dreadful One Eye Grey which attempted to provide something chilling and pocket sized to read on the way to work. This collection aims to do the same.

Time Out described the hard copy as 'A pocket horror show.. far from dreadful and worth every penny,' whilst the Southwark News referred to them as 'A dread good read'. That review went on to say 'inspired by a century old genre but addressing timeless fears in a modern voice, these will be scaring commuters witless for a long time to come.' The Fortean Times and Guardian were equally keen and BBC Radio Four adapted a couple of the pieces into short radio plays as part of their 2010 London season.

This is the second collection of London stories featuring a score and more talented writers released on Kindle. The 25 stories are specially selected from five published editions of One Eye Grey magazine as well as a few new tales unpublished before.

More than ever, this lot of stories from another London is a collaborative effort bringing together people who fancied creating something chilling and pocket sized to read on the tube. Amongst the things to look forward to are terrifying trees, unusual souvenirs and frightening fast food. There are fairies off Balls Pond Road, terrifying northsiders who kidnap Peckham damsels, a slightly obsessive woman from beyond the grave in Brixton and the curious tale of whipping Jack. In addition you could enjoy tales of were-carp in the covered rivers, lost children in strange cellars, haunted stations, ghostly Eskimos in Chelsea, a murderers' chorus and why an open toilet door is the route to riches.

The stories take place in pubs, underground, alongside canals and on housing estates. In essence the London we know and love but alongside this there is another London that looks like the familiar streets, tube stations and parks. This collection invites you to take a stroll down those.
